New Jersey Aviation Association Joins Forces With the Alliance for Aviation Across America

Together, the Organizations Will Continue to Educate Lawmakers on the Necessity to Invest in our Nation's Air Transportation System

The New Jersey Aviation Association today announced that it is joining the Alliance for Aviation Across America, which is a diverse coalition of individuals, businesses, non-profit organizations, farmers and community leaders dedicated to protecting community access, modernizing the air transportation system, and promoting a comprehensive FAA reauthorization bill in Congress.

“We are proud to join forces with AAAA’s member organizations that include small businesses, charities, pilot groups, legislative leaders, and safety officials,” said Arlene Feldman, the President of the New Jersey Aviation Association (NJAA).

The New Jersey Aviation Association, representing New Jersey’s multi-billion dollar general aviation community shares in AAAA’s dedication to promoting and protecting the interests of small businesses and communities around the country that depend on general aviation. These groups will work together to educate lawmakers and the general public on the importance of aviation and the financial benefits it provides to the state’s economy.

NJAA will continue to support the Alliance for Aviation Across America and the major aviation organizations it represents by promoting the fact that aviation is a major component of the national transportation system and an important vehicle for economic growth in America.
